The Crockett House is a two-story, five-bay, center passage plan frame dwelling, constructed ca. 1850 at 909 Market Street in Pocomoke City, Worcester County, Maryland. The building rests on a low brick foundation, and is sheathed in wood weatherboards and covered by a medium-pitched gable roof clad in asphalt shingles. The decorative detailing of the exterior and interior reflect the influence of the Greek Revival style. A service wing extending from the rear of the house exhibits the stepped, "telescope" form, typical of the region in the period. The building retains an exceptionally high level of integrity. Also on the property is a two-story frame garage dating from the early twentieth century.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION:

The Crockett House, otherwise known as the Sally Jones house or the Cannon property, is located at 909 Market Street in the southern residential district of Pocomoke City, Worcester County, Maryland. Built around 1850, the two-story, five-bay, center passage plan frame house faces west with the principal gable roof oriented on a north/south axis.

The building is sheathed with plain weatherboards and supported by a minimal stretcher bond brick foundation. The medium-pitched gable roof is clad in asphalt shingles and trimmed with a boxed cornice and flush gable ends finished with classical-profile moldings. Extending from the rear of the house is a stepped "telescope" service wing containing a dining room and kitchen.

The west (main) facade is a symmetrical five-bay elevation with a center entrance and flanking six-over-six sash windows. The eight-panel front door is framed by fluted surrounds and pyramidal shaped corner blocks. Three-light sidelights are located to each side and a three-light transom tops the entrance. Sheltering the front door is a single-bay gable roofed porch with square posts and built-in seats. The windows to each side are trimmed with plain surrounds and fitted with louvered shutters. Five windows light the second floor. The center six-over-six sash is flanked by two-over-two sidelights as well in corner block surrounds. The other six-over-six sash windows are framed by plain surrounds with louvered shutters. Finishing the base of the roof is a boxed cornice with period bed and crown moldings.

The north and south gable ends are largely alike with pairs of six-over-six sash windows lighting the first and second floors to each side of brick interior end chimneys with distinctive corbelled caps. Beaded-edge bargeboards trim the gable ends.

Covering part of the east (back) wall is a stepped "telescope" service wing that dates to the same period as the main block. This comprises a two-story, two-bay section containing a dining room, extended by a one-story, one-room kitchen. The wing is sheathed in weatherboards and illuminated by six-over-six sash windows. A brick chimney with a corbelled cap rises through the gable end of the two-story section. A single-story, one-room plan kitchen extends from the east gable of the two-story portion, with a brick interior end chimney flanked by small two-over-two sash windows. The eaves are finished with a molded bargeboard.

A later two-story, one-bay by one-bay corner in-fill includes bathrooms on each floor, and a one-story utility room was attached to the end of the service wing around 1940. Extending from the south side of the service wing is a screened-in, shed-roofed porch supported by square posts.

An early twentieth century gable roofed frame garage stands in the back yard; this building does not contribute to the significance of the resource.

The interiors of the Crockett house have remained essentially unchanged since the mid-nineteenth century. One of the few alterations in the front part of the house included the removal of a hall partition in an effort to enlarge the parlor. The central stair is distinguished by a boldly turned newel post and rectangular balusters supporting a slender rounded-profile handrail. A four-panel door retaining an iron box lock opens into the stair closet. The chimney breast is fitted with a Greek Revival-style mantel; paneled pilasters support a frieze below a thick board shelf. Trimming the perimeter of the room is a simple stepped baseboard.

A flat six-panel door opens into the living room on the north side of the hall where a plain mid-nineteenth century mantel fronts the chimney breast. A stepped baseboard finishes the perimeter of the living room as well. Another six-panel door opens into the dining room directly behind the living room.

The dining room is simply finished as is the kitchen, which has been reworked to provide modern facilities. According to Crockett family tradition, a stair was formerly located in the kitchen to provide access to the loft above.

The second floor remains largely unaltered with Greek Revival two-panel doors opening into each bedroom. Plain mid-nineteenth century mantels survive in the front bedrooms and each space is trimmed with a beaded baseboard molding. Some of the rooms have built-in closets with two-panel doors. A short two-panel door provides access from the bedroom above the dining room into the storage area above the kitchen.

A two-story gable-front frame garage supported by a low concrete foundation stands behind the house. The building is sheathed in weatherboards and has a large garage door opening on the west side.

Section number 8 Page 6

SIGNIFICANCE SUMMARY:

The ca. 1850 Crockett House is significant under Criterion C as an exceptionally well-preserved example of a vernacular house form characteristic of the mid-19th century period in the Eastern Shore region. The two-story, five-bay, single-pile frame building with a stepped "telescope" service wing represents a traditional vernacular house form typical of the period in the region; it is outstanding in Worcester County for its excellent state of preservation, retaining intact the majority of its exterior and interior fabric, decorative detailing, and plan features. The modest Greek Revival decorative detailing also is characteristic of the period in the region, including corner block surrounds framing prominent exterior openings, and interior woodwork throughout the house. The two-part stepped rear wing represents a regional response to a mid-nineteenth century trend to incorporate service functions within the envelope of the main dwelling rather than in separate outbuildings. Such wings often extend in linear fashion from the gable end of the main block; in this case, the service wing extends to the rear at a ninety-degree angle to the main block, partially shielding it from public view. The Crockett House derives additional significance as one of only a few antebellum dwellings surviving in Pocomoke City, which was ravaged by destructive fires in 1888, 1896, and 1922. The Crockett House was spared by its location on the perimeter of the town, rather than in the dense business and residential area.

HISTORIC CONTEXT:

The house was originally constructed for Sally Evans Jones (1775-1853). In June 1850, she purchased a 10½ acre lot for $200, comprising part of the tract called "Cowley", which made up part of the village of "Newtown" (the former name of Pocomoke City); the property was improved shortly afterwards. Sally Evans married Agar Lewis Jones in October 1823, and according to Reverend James Murray, Pocomoke City's early historian, she operated a hotel that formerly belonged to a Captain John Merchant. Little else is known about her other than the fact that she donated the lot on which a church school was erected for the St. Mary's-the-Virgin P.E. congregation. Sarah (Sally) Jones is listed in the 1850 U.S. Census, along with her husband, Lewis, who is identified as a "tavernkeeper"; other members of the household were 55 year old Rosa Young and 18 year old John Wilkison.

Sally Jones died in 1853, and as directed in her will she was buried in the St. Mary's Episcopal Church yard. It was her desire that her real estate be divided between Rosa Young and her executor, Moses U. J. Stevenson of Somerset County. Two years after Sally Jones' death, Moses Stevenson sold the 10 acre Cowley land and its improvements to Ralph and Cescy Ross for $1,100, a price that suggests a substantial structure then stood on the property. A little over a year later, the Rosses sold a 15 acre parcel with the house to Elizabeth C. Cannon for $2,124.

Elizabeth C. Cannon owned the Jones house and lot for twenty-eight years, and she is designated at this location on the Newtown district map in the 1877 Lake, Griffing, and Stevenson atlas. The 1870 U. S. Census identified Elizabeth Cannon as a 54 year old housekeeper with real estate and personal property valued at $2,300. Also enumerated in the 1870 census as members of her household were 25 year old Mary and a 50 year old clergyman named John Crosdale. In 1884, Elizabeth Cannon sold the house and six acres to Robert J. Dryden (1823-1911) and her daughter Mary Cannon Dryden (1837-1915), who retained ownership until their deaths. Mary Dryden's only heir, Clayton Cannon, sold the property in 1915. By 1924, the property was becoming surrounded by new construction on what was then called "Market Street Extended," and it was transferred in January of that year to James M. Crockett, in whose family the property remained until 1990.

The Crockett House was built on the periphery of the village of Newtown at a time when the river village was expanding from a ferry crossing and tobacco warehouse site to a thriving merchant and commercial center for southern Worcester County. Between 1800 and 1850 the population steadily increased from 150 to more than 500 residents at mid-century.

In his history of the area published in 1883, Reverend James Murray described early nineteenth century Newtown as follows:

Within the limits of town there were twenty-eight dwelling houses and seven or eight business houses comprising stores and mechanical shops. Outside those limits were five houses occupied by families, which might be considered suburban residences.

The Crockett House was built along the Virginia Road south of the town proper. Standing on the east side of the town is another "suburban" residence known as Winter Quarter (WO-64), a Federal-style gable-front frame dwelling erected around 1840. Due to several destructive fires that ravaged Pocomoke City, only a handful of pre-Civil War dwellings survive. The Crockett House and Winter Quarter stand out as the earliest and best preserved dwellings among Pocomoke City's oldest housing stock.

c. 1850

Dating to around 1850, the Crockett house, historically known as the Sally Jones house or the Cannon property, stands as one of a few antebellum dwellings in Pocomoke City. The two-story, five-bay frame structure is well preserved with ninety-five percent of its mid nineteenth century features intact. Attached to the back of the main house is a stepped dining room and kitchen wing. With its early date and well preserved condition, the Crockett house is an important remnant of pre-Civil War buildings in Pocomoke City.

Construction of this two-story, center hall frame dwelling was financed by Sally Jones, who purchased a 10 1/2 acre lot in June of 1850 for $200. Comprising part of a tract called "Cowley" that joined the village of New Town, the property was improved apparently soon afterwards. Sally Jones did not live to enjoy her new house long for she died a few years later and her will of 1853 devised the property to Moses U. J. Stevenson of Somerset County. Two years later Moses U. J. Stevenson transferred the 10-acre Cowley lot to Ralph and Cescy Ross for $1,100, a sum that suggests substantial improvements had been made to the property. The Rosses, however, held title to the house and lot for little more than a year when Elizabeth C. Cannon acquired the slightly enlarged 15-acre property for $2,124.00. Early in the twentieth century the frame house was purchased by James M. Crockett in whose family the property has remained to this day.(May 1989)

HISTORY AND SUPPORT

Construction of this two-story, five-bay frame house was financed by Sally Jones, who purchased a 10 1/2 acre lot in June of 1850 for $200. (EDM 3/274) Comprising part of a tract called "Cowley" that joined the village of New Town, the property was improved apparently soon afterwards. Sally Jones did not live to enjoy her house long for she died a few years later and her will of 1853 devised the property to Moses U. J. Stevenson of Somerset County. Two years later Moses U. J. Stevenson transferred the 10-acre Cowley lot to Ralph and Cescy Ross for $1,100, a sum that suggests substantial improvements had been made to the property. (EDM 6/649) The Rosses, however, held title to house and lot for little more than a year when Elizabeth C. Cannon acquired the slightly enlarged 15-acre property for $2,124.00. (JAP 1/106) Early in the twentieth century the frame house was purchased by James M. Crockett in whose family the property has remained to this day. (May 1989)

Stretching farther eastward is a single-story one-room plan kitchen that dates to the same period as the main house. Six-over-six sash windows pierce each side and a corbelled cap brick chimney rises through the gable end. Piercing the east gable end to either side of the stack are small two-over-two sash windows. The gable end is finished with a molded bargeboard. Attached to the end of the kitchen wing is a shorter single story furnace and laundry room, added in 1940. Marking the back wall is a eight-panel door that was evidently taken from the main house when the two-story infill was attached at the end of the hall. Extending from the south side of the service wing is a screened-in, shed-roofed porch supported by square posts.

The interiors of the Crockett house have remained essentially unchanged since the mid nineteenth century. One of the few alterations in the front part of the house was the removal of a hall partition in an effort to enlarge the parlor. The centrally positioned stair is distinguished by a bold turned newel post and rectangular balusters support a slender roundish-profile handrail. A four-panel door surviving with its iron box lock opens into the stair closet. The chimney breast is fitted with a period mantel. Paneled pilasters support a paneled frieze under a thick board shelf. Trimming the perimeter of the room is a simply stepped baseboard.

A flat six-panel door opens into the living room on the north side of the hall where a plain mid nineteenth century mantel trims the chimney breast. A stepped baseboard finishes the perimeter of the living room as well. Another six-panel door opens into the dining room directly east of the living room.

The dining room is simply finished as is the kitchen, which has been reworked to provide modern facilities. According to family tradition a stair was located formerly in the kitchen to provide access to the loft above.

The second floor survives relatively unaltered with Greek Revival two-panel doors opening into each bedroom. Plain mid nineteenth century mantels survive in the front bedrooms and each space is trimmed with a beaded baseboard. A few rooms have built-in closets with two-panel doors. A short two-panel door provides access from the bedroom above the dining room into the storage space above the kitchen.

The two-story gable-front frame garage stands behind the house and is supported by a low concrete foundation. The weatherboard frame structure has a large garage door opening in the west side.
